Welcome Home to Luxury

When you spend nearly two decades in the hospitality industry, you tend to know a thing or two about welcoming people home.

In 2011, Maite Granda earned her degree in interior design, and since then, she's been partnering with clients to design luxurious spaces best described as anything but nichéd. "I was born in the Caribbean and grew up in Europe. I'm very comfortable with color and texture, but I absolutely love the serenity of a beach home," she says. "My main purpose is to identify what the client is trying to achieve and make it happen."

Whether she's infusing coastal design into each project or introducing a unique flair with Moroccan and Scandinavian styles, she believes a true understanding of the psychology behind each client is just as important as a designer's creative expression. "When I'm designing, I want to create more than a beautiful house," she says. "Personalized luxury that invites a type of rest and relaxation only found within the walls of a home—that's my chief aim with every single project I take on."
